

As an American and a satellite radio listener, I strongly urge you to reject the NAB's petition 04-160. Broadcasting regulations have for many years now shown themselves to be antiquated and ill-equipped to address current technology and the overall interests of today's consumer. Satellite radio is a godsend to many people, and should be allowed to continue to expand its consumer offerings which will spur innovation and creativity in an otherwise extremely stagnant medium.

Rather than measure new offerings against long-standing and perhaps irrelevant practices, please take the time to address the benefits they possess and consider the need for changing the current rules and regulations to better serve the consumer.

Sincerely,

John Mancuso
